Billionaire-Backed Author Trio Challenges Leaders to Enact Positive Change in the American Workplace

04.18.05, 7:55 AM ET

LAS VEGAS, April 18 /PRNewswire/ -- In the midst of greed, and political and corporate scandal, one is compelled to ask leaders, "Where are your ethics?" Responsibly wielding power and influence is not a choice, but a duty. The people in positions of authority have credentials from the best institutions, and certainly Business Ethics was a required course of study. Money laundering, embezzlement, and insider trading were not on the syllabus. The list of improprieties from individuals in positions of power is staggering.

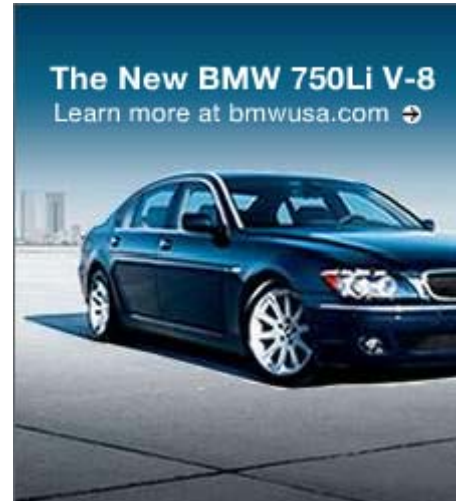

So what do we do when public officials, CEOs, and moral authorities betray our trust? Vicky Therese Davis, William R. Patterson, and D. Marques Patton, co-authors of the new business motivation book "The Baron Son: Vade Mecum 7," suggest we become self-sufficient and financially independent. Through their primer on ethical leadership, they call for change in the integrity of the American workplace, from the top down.

Endorsed by notable figures such as billionaire Founder and CEO of Black Entertainment Television Bob Johnson, management guru Tom Peters, and the CEO of Nasdaq Financial Products, Inc., John L. Jacobs, the author trio directs its conscientious campaign at Fortune 500 CEOs, educators, and media outlets.

"We need to hear our leaders reintroduce language like 'principle,' 'value' and 'accountability.' It is imperative that we renew the spirit of these ideals," Davis says.

executive perks and golden parachutes, and rightly so, as it will lead to higher profits every time," Patterson says. "It is only by building trust that we can influence others and secure their support. With the loss of other's confidence, all personal and professional success becomes fleeting."
